The original Toolbox were created for the Governors Conference on Greenways and Blueways as a collaborative effort between the urban planning and design firm of Parsons Harland Bartholomew & Associates, Inc. (Parsons HBA), the Virginia Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR), the Virginia Trails Association (VTA), and Roanoke Valley Greenways. We wish to thank the Pennsylvania Greenways Partnership for their generosity in granting permission to use material from its how-to manual, Creating Connections. The Toolbox includes many ideas, recommendations, and excerpts from that publication. Thanks also go to the Brandywine Conservancy, Inc. for permission to include the sample easement found in Appendix VIII. The easement was borrowed from the Conservancy's publication, Community Trails Handbook, which is an excellent reference for practical steps to be taken in the promotion and development of trails. We also found the book, Greenways for America, by Charles E. Little (The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1990) to be informative and inspirational, providing a rich sense of the greater social context in which greenways and trails are finding their place. Special recognition is given to the Richmond, Virginia office of Parsons HBA for its donation of time and resources to the development of the Toolbox. The Parsons HBA commitment allowed the Toolbox to be created for a reduced cost at an accelerated schedule.

Due to improvements in trail development and maintenance techniques and new online resources, the Department of Conservation and Recreation decided to update Chapters 4 and 5 with resource hotlinks and summary field guides. These updates were done by Land Planning and Design Associates through collaboration with a technical advisory team representing trail designers, builders, and agency reviewers. Along with many state agencies and local governments, the International Mountain Bicycling Association, American Trails, the Pedestrian and Bicycle Information Center, the Rails to Trails Conservancy, the U.S. Forest Service and the Access Board have generously shared their material for this guide.
